

Fall Speaker Series with Dr. Chris Reynolds

A New Approach to Protecting Public Health:
The South Australian Public Health Act 2011

Tuesday, September 18, 2012 · 12:00 – 1:00 PM
Georgetown University Law Center
E. B. Williams Library, Room 358
600 New Jersey Avenue, NW · Washington, DC 20001

Chris Reynolds

Faculty of Education, Humanities and Law, Flinders Law School

Moderated by Alexandra Jones

O'Neill Institute Law Fellow

Biography

Dr. Chris Reynolds is a barrister and attorney and legal academic with postgraduate qualifications in public health and a PhD from the Department of Community Medicine at Adelaide University. He has taught Constitutional Law, Public Health and Environmental Law, and Law and Medicine at Flinders University School of Law, the University of South Australia and the University of Melbourne. His main areas of research and consulting have been in public health law and policy and he has written 3 books in the field, the most recent being Public and Environmental Health Law (pub 2011). Chris has advised the Australian Government and State governments on reforms to public health (notably in the development of the South Australian Public Health Act 2011), food legislation, drug, alcohol and tobacco laws, environment protection laws and also in policy relating to HIV/AIDS. Between 2002 and 2005 he was a Director of Research at the National Centre for Public Health Law at Melbourne's Latrobe University and was a Food Standards Australia New Zealand (FSANZ) Fellow until 2004.